High-Key If we say a painting is "high-key" we mean that most or all of the image is light or pale in value. For example, colours mixed with white, called "pastels" or "tints", are high-key. It's the opposite of "low-key", of course. Keep it HIGH KEY. Designed in collaboration with Desi Perkins, this worldwide fan fave has turned the classic aviator on its head. Featuring an oversized metal frame with flat reflective lenses and signature triangle notches, each color of HIGH KEY is a wardrobe essential. High-key definition, (of a photograph) having chiefly light tones, usually with little tonal contrast (distinguished from low-key). See more.

High-key lighting is a style of lighting for film, television, or photography that aims to reduce the lighting ratio present in the scene. This was originally done partly for technological reasons, since early film and television did not deal well with high contrast ratios, but now is used to suggest an upbeat mood. High-key definition is - having or producing light tones only with little contrast used of a photographic print or subject or of the lighting of a photographic subject.
