This book details the encounters of Choukri with Jean Genet in Tangier over a short period of time. The prose describing the encounters and the selection of details to include in the description is masterful - in a slim volume one gains both a feeling of Morocco's bureaucrats, of the Reviews: 3.

Saint Genet it is not -- Choukri's observations are acute, but limited. The larger subject of his narrative is Tangier in all its backwardness and squalor -- the boy prostitutes, dwarfs and cripples, the Gnaoua musicians, the veiled Moslem women, the officious petty officials, the American hippies.
